The remains of an organism are buried by sediments. Its soft parts begin to decay.

LIVEWORKSHEETS

Layers of sediment build up and are compressed to form a rock.

LIVEWORKSHEETS

The bones are slowly dissolved by water that passes through the rock. Minerals in the groundwater replace the bones of the organism.

LIVEWORKSHEETS

Millions of years later, the rock surrounding the skeleton rises to the surface. Erosion or human activity may then expose the fossil.

LIVEWORKSHEETS