B. CLASSWORK (16 questions)

I. Choose the correct answers.

Throughout history, sport has reflected social change as much as it has entertained audiences. In the early twentieth century, some tournaments were affected by racial segregation, which prevented talented athletes from competing equally.

Wilma Rudolph, who was once partially paralysed by illness, demonstrated extraordinary (1) _____ as she trained relentlessly to become an Olympic champion. Despite the racial divides of the time, she managed to (2) _____ her competitors in the final race, astonishing both critics and spectators.

Modern sporting events are equally intense. Before reaching the championship match, teams must survive the (3) _____ and other elimination stages. In professional boxing, which is widely regarded as a (4) _____, athletes must combine physical strength with tactical intelligence in order to defeat their opponents. Meanwhile, in large international tournaments, organisers often (5) _____ new athletes into national squads months before the competition officially kicks off.

(1) A. willpower	B. quarter-final	C. racehorse	D. supporting statement
(2) A. mend	B. recruit	C. see off	D. induct
(3) A. action-packed game	B. semi-final	C. qualifying round	D. contact sport
(4) A. non-contact sport	B. contact sport	C. race track	D. racial divides
(5) A. reflect on	B. see off	C. recruit	D. paralyze

II. Match the words with the correct definitions.

1. quarter-final	1-	a. a person who watches an event, especially a sports competition, without taking part in it
2. spectator	2-	b. the practice or policy of separating people based on race, ethnicity, or other social characteristics
3. induct	3-	c. the stage of a tournament in which eight competitors or teams remain, and the winners move on to the semi-final
4. paralyze	4-	d. to cause someone to lose the ability to move part or all of their body, either temporarily or permanently
5. segregation	5-	e. to formally admit someone into a position, organisation, or group

III. Read the text and decide if the statements are TRUE or FALSE.

In the 1960s, many sports competitions in the United States were still influenced by racial divides and segregation. In some regions, talented athletes were not allowed to compete equally, and opportunities were limited based on skin colour rather than ability. However, change slowly began to take place as more international tournaments kicked off and attracted global attention.

Wilma Rudolph was one of the athletes who challenged this system. As a child, she suffered from a serious illness that partially paralysed her left leg. Doctors believed she might never walk normally again. Nevertheless, through extraordinary willpower and years of treatment, she managed to mend her physical condition and eventually learned to run competitively.

At school, a coach noticed her potential and decided to recruit her for the athletics team. Later, she was formally inducted into a national training programme, where she trained intensely for international events. Before reaching the Olympic final, she had already survived a demanding qualifying round and a tense semi-final. In the final race, thousands of spectators filled the stadium, watching what many described as an action-packed competition. Despite strong opponents, Wilma managed to see off her rivals and win gold medals.

Her victories did more than bring sporting success. They helped challenge racial divides and demonstrated that resilience and talent were more powerful than prejudice.

Questions:

1. Segregation limited equal opportunities for athletes in some parts of the country. _____
2. Wilma's illness completely paralysed her entire body. _____
3. A coach selected Wilma to join the school team after recognising her talent. _____
4. Wilma reached the Olympic final without competing in earlier rounds. _____
5. The spectators were bored because the competition lacked excitement. _____
6. Wilma's achievements contributed to reducing racial divisions in sport. _____
