Young Environmental Heroines

Melati Wijsen and Isabel Wijsen are sisters. They live in Bali. In 2013 they started a movement called 'Bye Bye Plastic Bag. Melati and Isabel's initial goal was to make their hometown free of plastic. They even managed to get a hundred thousand signatures to get a local government support. Melati and her friends also helped local-shops and eight hundred families to use bags made of alternative materials instead of plastic bags.

After three years, the movement gained global support. A total of 13 countries showed interest in supporting this movement. In the last 4 years, the Bye Bye Plastic Bag movement has succeeded in getting 57,500 people in 430 locations to participate in preventing 115 tons of plastic from polluting the oceans.

Based on a survey by Making Oceans Plastic Free, which is one of Bye Bye Plastic Bags' partners, stated that the number of plastic bags was reduced by 40 percent in 2020. Food packaging was reduced by 20 percent, cigarette butts were reduced by 17 percent, and plastic bottles and cups were reduced by 16 percent. Thanks to their persistence and seriousness for six years. Currently Melati and Isabel have more than 50 teams around the world, from Australia, Spain, Switzerland, to Greece. The youth have become the leaders of the team
