First published in 1959, The Magic of Thinking Big written by Dr. David Schwartz is a must-read for those who want to step of out their comfort zone. The book attempts to explain everything that leads to success and how to keep failure away. Among the deciding factors in thinking big is giving up the habit of making excuses. Many a time, people come up with excuses or justifications which are related to health, intellect, age and luck so that they feel better about being careless or irresponsible. When failure does occur, self-regulated people tend not to put the blame on their misfortune. Instead, they genuinely express their gratitude towards their current situation, try to figure out what goes wrong and move forward step by step. According to Schwartz, big thinkers have a tendency to speak with a big-picture mindset. They focus on what is important and feel less worried about trivial things. They talk about their plans with uplifting language and optimism, and do the same with their counterparts. The practice of being a good listener is another element resulting in success. Big thinkers should pay attention to what people are saying, even feedback. They need to be open to novel ideas. Their initial plans will be polished as a result.
