"The Life of a Digital Nomad"

Lucas _____(to be) a software developer who lives in a different city every three months. At the moment, he _____(stay) in a small apartment in Tokyo because he loves Japanese culture. He has visited twelve countries so far, and he does not want to stop yet. He usually _____(work) from local coffee shops where he meets other travelers. Although his lifestyle requires a lot of organization, he enjoys the freedom of being his own boss. When people see him working on his laptop at 2:00 AM, they think he must be very tired, but he loves his routine.

His journey _____(start) five years ago. While he _____ (work) for a big company in London, he realized that he wanted to see the world. He felt trapped in a small office every day. Before he bought his first plane ticket, he _____(save) enough money to travel for a whole year without working. He sold his car, packed a small suitcase, and left his old life behind. At that time, his parents were worried, but they eventually understood his passion. If he hadn't saved that money, he would never have started this adventure.

Next month, his adventure continues in a new continent. He _____(fly) to Australia because he wants to learn how to surf in the Pacific Ocean. He _____ (probably stay) there for the whole summer. During his time in Sydney, he _____(work) remotely for a new technology startup. It sounds exhausting, but he enjoys the challenge. He might be in Australia for Christmas, although he is not sure yet.

Lucas _____(know) that if you travel alone, you learn a lot about yourself. He also thinks that if he finds a cheap flight, he will visit New Zealand too. He often says: "If I had more time, I would visit every single country in the world." By the end of this year, Lucas _____(travel) across four different continents. He _____ (write) a blog about his trips now. Some readers think his life can't be as perfect as it looks on Instagram, but he tries to be honest about the difficulties too. Next year, he is going to publish his first book to inspire other young professionals to follow their dreams.
