Madame Tussauds

It was their first day in London. It was hot and sunny. Bob and Martha wanted to see everything in the city. They both love visiting museums so they decided to start with Madame Tussauds Wax Museum. They were on Baker Street, but they didn't know exactly where the museum was, so they asked someone for directions.

'Excuse me, sir. How can we get to Madame Tussauds Museum? Is it far from here?'

'No, it's not. Go down this street and turn left on Marylebone Road. You'll see it on your left.'

Bob and Martha kept walking and after a few minutes they were at the museum. The queue was so long that they had to wait for two hours for the tickets. When they finally got inside, they were amazed.

There were wax models everywhere and they looked like real people; they were film and sports stars, rock and pop singers, politicians, fashion models. They saw Brad Pitt, Angelina Jolie, Kate Moss, Picasso, Albert Einstein, David Beckham, Michael Jackson, and many, many others. Bob wanted to take photos of them but he didn't know if he could. He turned around and saw a man. He was wearing glasses and a blue uniform. He must be someone from the museum staff, Bob thought. 'Sir, may I take some photos, please?' he asked him. Then he heard Martha laughing.

'Oh, Bob! This is a wax model, not a real person!'
