We went hiking through a national park that had a lot of waterfalls. The weather was and there was a lot of snow on the ground, but the waterfalls weren't frozen. There were a lot of small waterfalls, and then we saw one that was
. It must have been over 100 meters high. It looked absolutely , with ice hanging from the top, and water crashing into the river below. We were able to walk behind the waterfall.

It was a really experience at first, because it felt like we could be carried away by the water. The noise was and we couldn't hear each other shouting. But we had a time standing there, in the cave behind the water, watching it all fall down.
