The Crow and the Pitcher

There was a very thirsty crow flying in over a very hot and dry grassland. The crow found a pitcher with a little bit of water at the bottom of it. But the pitcher was tall and had a skinny neck. No matter how hard he tried, the crow could not reach the water. The poor crow thought he might die of thirst.

Then, the crow had an idea! Picking up some small rocks, the crow dropped them into the pitcher one by one. After each rock was dropped in, the water rose high and higher. Finally, the water rose to the top of the pitcher and the crow was able to drink it.
