Young Problem Solvers

Every year, the City Teen Council organises a competition called "Young Problem Solvers". Students aged 13 to 18 find problems in their city and suggest solutions. They can work alone or in groups of up to five people. A panel of teachers, engineers, and city officials chooses the best ideas, and the winners receive prizes and a chance to present their projects to the city council. Here are this year's two winners.

The Green Team from Hoa Binh Secondary School noticed that students throw away a lot of food at lunchtime. Every day, their school canteen fills several large bins with leftover rice, vegetables, and meat. The team suggests that students sort their leftovers into separate bins. Then a farm nearby would collect the food waste and turn it into biogas for cooking. The farm could also use some of the waste to make fertiliser for its vegetables.

Mai Anh, a Grade 9 student, worked alone. She saw many motorbikes parked on the pavement near school gates, so children had to walk on the road. For two weeks, she stood near her school gate every morning and counted the motorbikes. She also interviewed parents and teachers about the problem. She suggests that the city should not allow motorbikes to park there at drop-off and pick-up times. Instead, parents could use a parking area in a nearby street.

How I kept a well-balanced life

When I was at secondary school, I was already singing on TV, so I had to learn how to balance my study and my work. At first, it was really hard. I often felt tired, my marks went down, and I had little time for my friends. Then my music teacher gave me some good advice, and my life slowly changed. Here is what I did.

First, I managed my time carefully. Every Sunday evening, I sat down with a notebook and planned the coming week. I made a weekly list of tasks and did the most important ones first. I also took short breaks between my tasks because they gave my brain a rest and improved my mood.

Second, I looked after my health. I slept at least eight hours a day and went for a walk with my grandparents every morning. I ate a lot of fruit and vegetables and avoided fattening foods like chips and pizza. I also drank plenty of water instead of sugary drinks.

Finally, I talked to my family and teachers about my busy schedule, so they could give me extra support when I needed it. My teachers sometimes gave me more time for my homework, and my parents helped me prepare for important tests. Thanks to these changes, I finished secondary school with good marks and still enjoyed my singing career. (Linh, 22, singer)
