Víctor Barraza²

Victor, what can you tell us about yourself?

Víctor: I am a Peruvian architect. I live in Lima, but I am from Tingo María. I usually visit my parents in Tingo María and I love going out into the fields around Tingo María. It is a beautiful place.

What problem do you see in your community?

Víctor: In this time of the pandemic, people want to avoid using public transportation, so a lot of people are riding their bikes as everyday transportation. I really wanted a bike but it was too expensive.

How did you solve that problem?

Víctor: As an architect I researched information about bamboo. Bamboo grows all over Peru. To me, it is like giant grass. In one of my visits to my parents in Tingo María, I made a bike for myself. I noticed bamboo is a great material for bikes. Not only is it abundant, it is light, eco-friendly and inexpensive.

Is it difficult to make a bamboo bike?

Víctor: It is really hard. It takes three to four days to make one bike, but I am not alone. A group of friends and I started a business called Janko Eco-Bikes. We also teach other people to make these special bikes and we employ people to grow bamboo in Tingo María.

What is your dream?

Víctor: To make more bamboo bikes and to make bamboo houses!
