Until the evening of 4 October 1957, the US President, Dwight D. Eisenhower, was confident that he led the world's greatest nation. In the USA, the early 1950's are known as the Eisenhower years. A._____. The USA was the richest nation in the world and it was going richer all the time. Almost every American could hope to own a house and a car. As a general, Eisenhower had led US armed forces to victory in the Second World War and, until that evening in 1957, it seemed that no other nation could threaten the USA.

But then some news arrived that shook America's belief in itself: "The Russians are in space!" Until this moment Americans believed that their nation was the most powerful on Earth. But now the Soviet Union had gone beyond the Earth. Millions of radios all over the world could hear a new broadcast: "Beep...beep...beep..." B._____, the first object placed in space by humans. It was a Russian achievement and it shocked Americans. This was the time of the cold war. The Soviet Union was America's greatest enemy, and soldiers from both sides stood ready to fight in almost every part of the world. The risk of real fighting – a 'hot' war was always present.

C._____. It was also a war of technology and ideas. Each side presented its successes in science and technology as a proof that its political system was better. So, when the Soviet Union sent its little silver satellite up into the cold night sky of the Kazakh Republic, it was more than just an interesting scientific test. It was an act that showed the world that the Soviet Union was winning the war of ideas.
