Emily: During the lecture, you said that the cowboy tradition in Mexico began in the 1600s. _____ the situation there today?

Professor Diaz: Certainly. Some cowboys in Mexico are workers who live with the cattle and take care of them. The ranches there can be very large, and cattle need to be moved from place to place, so there are still cowboys working in Mexico today.

Liam: You talked about two kinds of cowboys in Mexico. _____ them again?

Professor Diaz: Sure. The most famous cowboys in Mexico are the charros. They ride their horses in contests called charreradas. The other kind of cowboys are the vaqueros—the ones who work with cattle every day.

Liam: _____ What kind of work do charros do, exactly?

Professor Diaz: I'll _____. For charros, riding horses and roping cattle is mostly a sport, or a hobby. Charros have many of the same skills as any cowboy, and they perform those skills for an audience in the charrerada events. But for the vaqueros, this is their job. It's how they make a living.

Liam: OK. So, Manuel Rodriguez ... the cowboy in the book ... is a vaquero, not a charro, right?

Professor Diaz: Exactly!

Emily: Just to clarify, _____ charros aren't real cowboys?

Professor Diaz: No, _____ charros are a part of the cowboy tradition, but many of them don't do it as actual work.
