Writing a blog can be a great thing to do. Indeed, you often hear stories of people turning their blog into their career and making a lot of money from it. But those are the minority cases, and the majority of bloggers do it for self-satisfaction and a relatively small following. But, before starting a blog, it's common sense to ensure you're doing it not only correctly, but also safely. Remember, your private details might be discovered, even if you don't use your real name. You might write about something one day and regret it later. Also, you must not write anything in a blog about someone which is untrue. This can land you in a lot of trouble. Finally, remember that anything written online stays online. So, have fun with your blog, but be careful and be safe.
