

Change the order of the sentences so that each sentence is linked logically to the sentence before it.

1. Those two have known each other since the summer before first grade.

Anila and Katie do almost everything together.

Katie's family moved to another town when Katie was in the third grade.

Six months later they moved back—right next door to Anila.

In second grade, the girls made a pact that they would room together in college.

They are closer than any other eighth-graders I know.

2. At seven o'clock I eat breakfast with my brother Chuck.

I have a routine that I try to follow every morning.

I arrive at the bus stop by 7:25, even though the bus doesn't get there until 7:35.

I get up at 6:45 and make my bed before I get in the shower.

That way, I'm not tempted to crawl back in for five more minutes of sleep.

Chuck and I need those ten minutes at the bus stop to talk.

3. An example of the proper way to use lie is “I need to lie down because I’m not feeling well.”

I always need to look in a dictionary to see which word to use.

An example of the proper way to use lay is “Do you want me to lay the clothes on top of the dryer?”

I have trouble using the words lie and lay.
