As I Gaze Upon My Father By: Merlyn Pen

In the brownish photo, my father
Sits up straight
Like a wooden board
With his knees crossed
And his hand folded gently over his knee,
But the sheepish smile gives him away
Like a pen trying to be a pencil.

He wore a white oxford
That was perfectly pressed
And smooth as a newborn's flesh.
As a second layer he wore a wool sweater
That was rough as sandpaper,
As if to show his life.
