Unexpected exports

If you believe that China produces lots of tea, France makes plenty of cheese, and Sweden's cold enough in winter to make its own ice, you're right. So why do these countries 'import / export' such products from the UK? Because there's a 'market / season' for them, that's why. The 'production / construction' of cheese in the UK has grown so much that it now makes more varieties than France does.

Ice cubes are also 'exchanged / exported' to Denmark and Hong Kong. 'Users / Consumers' in Germany, the USA and the UAE love British biscuits, and millions of pounds worth of them go to Nigeria every year. Chocolate made in the UK is 'available / ready' in Switzerland and Belgium, both of which produce excellent chocolate of their own, and UK chillies fly their way to Pakistan, which has its own tradition of growing the spicy little peppers. The UK also 'gains / sells' Scottish salmon in record-breaking amounts, 'transporting / increasing' it to Ireland, France and even the USA!
