Market Day

To start with, Jay felt pretty enthusiastic about the school market day. The idea of creating your own business sounded fun. My business will definitely stand out, thought Jay. It can't be the same as the others.

Everyone else in the class wanted to sell food. There were groups making fairy bread and groups selling milkshakes. One group was going to sell candy apples.

Jay came up with a different plan. He would stick balloons to a dart board. For $1, kids could have three darts to pop a balloon. The only thing he needed to buy was some balloons. Jay felt sure it would succeed. But on market day, Jay was disappointed. Hardly anyone came to throw darts. They were too busy buying frosted drinks and rainbow-colored bread. The crispy, crunchy taco stall was a real hit. It looked like his balloon game would fail.

Jay had an idea. "A free throw?" he asked a girl.

"Sure," said the girl. She threw a dart. Bang! the balloon exploded loudly. Everyone turned to look.

"Wow! That looks like fun," said a kid, coming over. Pretty soon there was a long line. Now that's better, thought Jay, smiling.
