Directions: Read the passage below. Then answer the following questions carefully.

Dolphins and Porpoises

Dolphins and porpoises are members of the whale family. In fact, they are the most common whales. If they have pointed or "beaked" faces, they are dolphins. If they have short faces, they are porpoises. Sometimes large groups of more than 1 000 dolphins can be seen.

Dolphins and porpoises swim in a special way called "porpoising." They swim through the surface waters, diving down and then leaping up-sometimes into the air. As their heads come out of the water, they breathe in air. Dolphins are acrobatic swimmers, often spinning in the air as they leap.

Humans have always had a special relationship with dolphins. Stories dating back to the ancient Greeks talk about dolphins as friendly, helpful creatures. There have been reports over the years of people in trouble on the seas who have been rescues and helped by dolphins.

The Mouse

One day, when the cat and mouse were playing, the cat bit off the mouse's tail. "Ouch!" cried the mouse, "Give me back my tail this instant!" "I'll give your tail back when you go to the cow and bring me some milk!" replied the cat.

LIVEWORKSHEETS

She held the mouse's tail high so the mouse could not reach it.

Right away, the mouse went to ask the cow for milk.

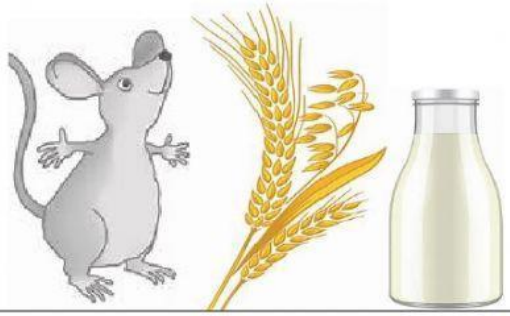

"I'll give you milk if you go to the farmer and get me some hay," said the cow.

When the mouse asked the farmer for hay, he said: "I'll give you hay if you go to the butcher and get me some meat."

The mouse wanted her tail back, so she went to the butcher. "I'll give you meat if you go to the baker and bring me some bread," said the butcher.

The mouse went to the baker, who said, "I'll give you bread. But if you get into my grain, I'll cut off your head!" The mouse quickly promised never to get into the baker's grain.

Then, the baker gave the mouse bread. The mouse gave the bread to the butcher, and the butcher gave the mouse meat. The mouse gave the meat to the farmer, and the farmer gave the mouse hay. The mouse gave the hay to the cow, and the cow gave the mouse milk. The mouse gave the cat milk and--finally!---the mouse got her tail back!
