Antarctica, the 1. (continent , country , city) that surrounds the South Pole, is the coldest region of the world. It is entirely covered by an icecap and the warmest it 2. (always , never , ever) gets is 32 degrees Fahrenheit (0 degrees Celsius). Most of the animals in this region live in the 3. (surrounded , surrounding , surroundings) ocean, because only birds and a few insects and animals can survive exposed to the wind in this cold land. In fact, several species of insects live only in the fur or feathers of animals and birds to 4. (avoid , remain , manage) freezing to death.

Emperor penguins 5. (should , need , must) to be social and cooperative to survive the hardship of winter in Antarctica. During the coldest and 6. (windy , windier , windiest) winter nights, they stand shoulder 7. (with , on , to) shoulder in a tight pack called a turtle. After a while, when the penguins in the middle of the pack get warm, they exchange positions with 8. (those , these , them) on the outside.

There are 18 species of penguins in Antarctica but none in the Arctic. This is probably because there are no land predators in Antarctica such as the bears, wolves, and foxes that are found in the Arctic. There are, 9. (moreover , however , although) , the skuas, predatory birds that will steal eggs and even baby penguins if adult penguins do not cooperate to protect 10. (his , their , her) young.
