Reading

Global temperatures have been increasing gradually, and scientists have concluded that because of this global warming, many countries are having more serious hurricanes, floods and earthquakes.

In the past decades, we have added more carbon dioxide to the atmosphere by burning fuels in vehicles and factories, by cutting down forests and by burning non-biodegradable items. Nitrous oxide and three other fluorinated industrial gases have also been emitted by human activities. These gases cover the earth's surface and prevent heat from escaping. Because air pollution can remain in the atmosphere for a long time, temperatures will continue to rise steadily.

It is our responsibility to try and prevent global warming from increasing further. We can do this by reducing, reusing and recycling things. If we use alternative energy such as wind, solar and water, we can cut down the emission of heat-trapping gases to the environment. Non-biodegradable items like plastic bags and foam boxes can be reused. Items like paper, cans and electronic parts can be recycled.
