

Reading Homework:

Little Red Riding Hood

Granny was so excited. Her granddaughter, Little Red Riding Hood, had called her earlier that morning. Little Red Riding Hood was coming to visit Granny, and she was going to bring a basket of chocolate chip cookies.

To prepare for the visit, Granny put on her favorite apron and bonnet. Then, she began to clean her house. As she was washing the dishes, Granny heard a knock at the front door.

Granny opened the door expecting to see Little Red Riding Hood. Instead, she saw a wolf with terrifying front teeth.

The wolf laughed as he walked in the house and shut the door behind him. "Yum," the wolf said. "Granny, you look delicious!"

The wolf was about to gobble Granny up when there was another knock on the door. The wolf grabbed Granny's apron and bonnet and then shoved her in a closet. "You better be quiet, Granny, or I'll eat your granddaughter too!" Then the wolf locked the closet door.

From the closet, Granny couldn't hear what was going on very well. She thought she heard Little Red Riding Hood commenting on the wolf's big eyes and ears, but she couldn't hear the wolf's reply. Then, Granny heard Little Red Riding Hood scream, followed by a lot of stomping feet.

"Oh no!" Granny thought. "What if the wolf eats my granddaughter? I've got to stop him!" She started banging on the door.

The closet door opened and Granny saw Little Red Riding Hood standing with a young man holding an ax.

"Don't worry, Granny!" Little Red Riding Hood said. "We scared off that wolf. He won't ever come back!"

The three of them happily sat down for a nice snack, eating the cookies Little Red Riding Hood had brought over. The wolf never returned to Granny's house.
