Once upon a time, there lived a very rich man. His name was Jack. Jack lived in a huge mansion with 16 bedrooms, three dining halls and two large kitchens. He also had 50 servants at his beck and call and a personal butler that saw to his every need.

Jack's father used to be a successful businessman. As Jack was the only son, he was the one that legally received money and property from his father. He inherited everything from the billion-dollar business to property after his father died of a heart attack.

Although Jack was rich, he always considered himself as having no special importance that made him better than others. He understood the needs of the poor and was charitable. He helped the poor and the needy. He set up an organization to help the poor. He also transformed part of his huge mansion into an orphanage which provided many homeless orphans with a roof over their heads.
