For each question, choose the correct answer.

by Tom Smith

An unusual visitor

A young emperor penguin from the Antarctic arrived on a beach in New Zealand yesterday. It's the first time people have seen an emperor penguin in New Zealand in 44 years.

A woman who was walking her dog on the beach saw something white on the sand. At first, she thought it was a child's toy, but when she got closer, she saw the young penguin standing there on the beach. She couldn't believe her eyes! Experts say it's quite unusual to see a penguin in New Zealand. They believe that the young penguin got lost while hunting for fish and is now thousands of miles from home.

This strange visitor has brought many curious people to the beach. Everyone is asked not to upset the penguin in any way and to keep their dogs on leads.

The penguin is about 10 months old and 80 cm tall. Emperor penguins are the tallest and largest of the penguin species. They grow up to 122 cm tall and weigh more than 40 kg.
