Dead Zone

Adapted from www.readworks.org

Each summer, a "dead zone" creeps across the waters of the Gulf of Mexico off the Texas coast. It's as scary as it sounds--if you're a fish. Spreading 5,000 square miles into the Gulf, the region is empty of life.

What causes the zone of death? Pollution. Fertilizer from farms across the Midwest wash into the Mississippi River and flow into the Gulf of Mexico. The fertilizers feed tiny floating algae, organisms that make their own food using energy from the sun, as plants do. Huge blooms of algae erupt and use up all the oxygen in the water--oxygen that other sea creatures need to survive.

The Gulf's dead zone has appeared every summer for the last 30 years. A few years ago, however, scientists think the dead zone might have been responsible for shark attacks along Texas beaches. Scientists think the sharks came into shallow waters near the edge of the dead zone in search of food.

In the shallows, the toothy fish came in contact with human swimmers in the wrong place at the wrong time.
