Vietnamese women play an increasingly important role in the nation's development, especially at present and in the future. When we look back at the development of Vietnamese society, particularly economic development, women hold a key position, as they directly participate in the national labor force and in paid labor. For instance, in agriculture – one of the country's key sectors – women make up 70 percent of the labor force, and in production alone, they make up not a modest workforce in export-oriented industries, such as garment and textile, footwear, light industry, and seafood processing. Also, women's economic roles will be much more major in the future as Viet Nam more deeply integrates into the world, while these industries continue to spearhead the economy.
