

Cultural expectations

BY ANDREA GARCÍA

I. READ THE TEXT AND HIGHLIGHT THE WORDS YOU DO NOT UNDERSTAND.

Karen worked for a company as a successful project manager in Argentina and was transferred to manage a team in France. She was excited about her new role but soon realised that managing her new team would be a challenge.

Despite their friend, Karen didn't feel respected as a leader. Her new staff would question her proposals openly in meetings, and when she gave them instructions on how to carry out a task, they would often go about it in their own way without checking with her. When she announced her decisions on the project, they would continue giving their opinions as if it was still up for discussion.

After weeks of frustration, Karen emailed her French manager about the issues she was facing with her team. Her manager simply asked her if she felt her team was still performing, and what she thought would help her better collaborate with her team members. Karen found her manager vague and didn't feel as if he was managing the situation satisfactorily.

What Karen was experiencing was a cultural clash in expectations. She was used to a more hierarchical framework where the team leader and manager took control and gave specific instructions on how things were to be done. This more directive management style worked well for her and her team in Argentina but did not transfer well to her new team in Sweden, who were more used to a flatter hierarchy where decision making was more democratic. When Gabriela took the issue to her Swedish manager, rather than stepping in with directions about what to do, her manager took on the role of coach and focused on getting her to come up with her own solutions instead.

Dutch social psychologist Geert Hofstede uses the concept of 'power distance' to describe how power is distributed and how hierarchy is perceived in different cultures. In her previous work environment, Karen was used to a high power distance culture where power and authority are respected and everyone has their rightful place. In such a culture, leaders make the big decisions and are not often challenged. Her French team, however, were used to working in a low power distance culture where subordinates often work together with their bosses to find solutions and make decisions. Here, leaders act as coaches or mentors who encourage independent thought and expect to be challenged.

When Karen became aware of the cultural differences between her and her team, she took the initiative to have an open conversation with them about their feelings about her leadership. Pleased to be asked for their thoughts, Karen's team openly expressed that they were not used to being told what to do. They enjoyed having more room for initiative and creative freedom. When she told her team exactly what she needed them to do, they felt that she didn't trust them to do their job well. They realised that Gabriela was taking it personally when they tried to challenge or make changes to her decisions, and were able to explain that it was how they'd always worked.

With a better understanding of the underlying reasons behind each other's behaviour, Karen and her team were able to adapt their way of working. Karen was then able to make adjustments to her management style so as to better fit the expectations of her team and more effectively motivate her team to achieve their goals.

2. ARE THESE SENTENCES TRUE OR FALSE?

1. Karen's management style worked well with her team in Argentina but not with her team in France.
True
False
2. Karen's team questioned her proposals and her decisions because they didn't trust or respect her.
True
False
3. Karen was satisfied with her French manager's way of dealing with her problem.
True
False
4. Karen found it helpful to talk openly with her team about the differences in their expectations.
True
False
5. Karen faced a problem with her French team because her management style was old-fashioned and wrong for the modern world.
True
False
6. The author believes that people from high power distance cultures and low power distance cultures should never work together.
True
False

3. PUT THE SENTENCES IN THE CORRECT GROUP

1. Team members can often challenge the manager.
2. The manager makes big decisions.
3. The manager involves the team in making decisions together.
4. The manager acts as a guide but encourages input from the team.
5. The manager has a lot of control over what happens.
6. The manager gives the team detailed instructions on what to do.
7. The manager gives specific advice to help solve problems.
8. The team members can take the initiative to do things their way.
9. The manager encourages the team to find their own solutions.
10. The members do not usually challenge the manager.

EXPECTATIONS IN A HIGH POWER DISTANCE CULTURE

EXPECTATIONS IN A LOW POWER DISTANCE CULTURE