Inbound Logistics

Inbound Logistics involves the activities of receiving, storing, and distributing raw materials for use in production. It is an integral element of business operations for a manufacturing firm. Inbound logistics services cover all activities required to bring goods from a sourcing location to a warehouse or production plant, such as transportation, inventory, warehousing and materials handling.

Receiving and storing raw materials is a big responsibility for manufacturers. Big companies may have separate facilities for storing raw materials. Smaller companies often maintain receiving areas within the plant, in which the manufacturing process takes place. The organizational element of the materials receiving process is important because it significantly affects the efficiency, with which staff can distribute materials. Delays in this process can set back production and cost the company money or opportunities.

Inbound Logistics is an outsourced service, which offers customers the following benefits: identification and reduction of inbound costs; lower inventory levels of both packaging and ingredients; increase supply chain agility so that new products or promotions can be brought to market faster, etc.
