The scene of the accident was crowded with people. Detective Samuel Gerard was in charge of the operation. He assigned Newman the task of looking round the site where the train hit the bus. The old prison guard was being questioned by both police and reporters. . The old prison guard declared that both prisoners were dead, as he had shot Coleman and Kimble had died in the crash. Gerard asked him if he had seen him die. The old prison guard admitted he hadn't. Newman ran up. . When Gerard asked the older guard why they were beside the railway line, he admitted he had given them to Kimble. . He ordered a search of a ten-kilometre radius.

Kimble made it to the hospital and went in through a back door. He walked into a room where the patient seemed to be either sleeping or unconscious. Kimble went into the bathroom, where he cleaned the cut on his leg, washed and shaved. . He found some money in his trousers. He also put on the man's glasses and a white doctor's coat he found. On his way out, Kimble helped some men to carry a patient into the hospital from an ambulance. . He opened his eyes and tried to warn the men the doctor was Kimble. But he was too weak to speak. Kimble ordered that the patient was taken to the accident department quickly. Kimble took the ambulance and drove away.

Gerard was wondering why Kimble had killed his wife when Newman ran up to tell him the young guard had seen Kimble at the hospital. Kimble drove fast along the Tennessee River. He drove into a tunnel through a mountain. . There was a police helicopter and several police cars at the end of the tunnel. Kimble got out of the ambulance. The floor was wet. Kimble found a side opening and went in. Gerard and Poole got into the tunnel. . He ran along this tunnel but, as there was water, he fell and dropped his gun. Suddenly, Kimble grabbed Gerard's hand. . He said "I didn't kill my wife". Gerard replied "That's not my problem". Kimble said "I want to find Helen's killer, too". He turned back to the river below and jumped down.
