Caitlin says

I feel confident that we'll have robots to do all the chores! I'm fed up having to do the ironing and take out the rubbish. I've seen Japanese robots on TV, so I think we might have domestic robots soon. For example, my friend's mum has just bought a machine that vacuums the floor by itself. If you don't have to do chores, there's more time to study – and have fun. I also think homes will be much greener, because the buildings will be better and they'll use clean electricity from the sun and things like that.

Brendan says

I don't think homes will be so different in the future. Some people might have robots, in the same way that some people now have cleaning and gardening staff in their houses, but most people will still have to do their own chores. Robots will make you lazy. What will people do with all the extra time? Play more video games? There's nothing wrong with doing a few chores every day: we should all be able to cook and clean, for example. And I'm not sure about greener homes. Maybe some new homes, but not older ones, because people might not have the money to modernise them. In short, I don't think we should expect very big changes.

Tuesday

Another day of ups and downs! Ewan appeared today with a new smartphone, which is much better than mine – I felt so ¹jealous (asleujo)! And I got my Maths exam marks back: 6.5. I was a bit ²..... (depositpinda) because I studied a lot and I expected a higher mark. But Stella got an 8, which is brilliant, so I felt really ³..... (dalg) for her. She was very ⁴..... (rovenus) the day before the exam because her parents promised her some concert tickets if she passed. So she's been happy and ⁵..... (eladrex) all day! Then in the library this afternoon, I was feeling a bit ⁶..... (yellon) because Toby wasn't there. Stella said he was in trouble, because she saw him outside the principal's office, so I got worried. But then
