A plane crash?

In March 2014, islanders on Gran Canaria were looking at the sea when they saw a big yellow object. It was long, with a yellow tail and it was in the water near the coast. They called the emergency services - the police, ambulances and the coast guard.

The emergency services told the newspapers that a plane was in the Atlantic Ocean about one kilometre from the coast of Gran Canaria. At about 3 pm, the BBC and other TV channels around the world began to report that a Boeing 737 crashed into the sea. Workers in the control tower at the airport in Gran Canaria confirmed the reports: 'We are missing a plane!' one airport worker said. Another plane that was flying over the area also saw the plane in the water.

A helicopter and a boat went out to sea to rescue the passengers but when they arrived, they found nothing. There was only a large tugboat - a boat that pulls other boats across the sea.

Finally, the emergency services confirmed the false alarm. It was not a plane - just a boat that looked a bit like a plane. Nobody knows what happened to the 'missing plane' from the airport!

Some people called the emergency services because they saw an object in the sea.

The control tower at the airport said that there wasn't a missing plane

The "plane" was a tugboat.

The control tower knew what happened to the missing plane.
