Octopus Attack: worst movie of all time!

by Daniel Stanley

Octopus Attack is an adventure movie. Or is it a thriller? Probably the screenwriter, Derek Johnson didn't know either. But he wrote it, so there's no one else to blame for this failed attempt to scare the audience.

The story of the movie is too complicated to follow, as there's a giant octopus attacking ships and sailors in the middle of the Pacific Ocean. That all sounds quite simple, but how and why the sailors turn into zombies is not clear at all. Hold on, because things can get worse. As you're watching, wondering why this has happened, a vampire appears and makes it all even more confusing.

The special effects are terribly unconvincing, making octopus, zombies and vampire look like technology from the early days of film making.

And as if that's not bad enough, the music along with a terrible choice of actor for the leading role make this movie a complete disaster. A definite no-no that anyone who values their time should avoid watching!
