

STEP 2: Makeup

Primer

Your name here, please:

After the sunscreen, apply a primer. Now, this part is very personal to each individual. You can use a primer that targets your specific skin concern.

The base

The next step would be a product that creates a consistent complexion throughout your face. For some, this may be a tinted moisturizer that is low coverage, while others may opt for a higher coverage foundation. You can apply the base with either a brush or a makeup sponge.

Spot correcting

The next step is taking a concealer and covering any trouble spots on your face. A concealer typically has higher coverage than the base and can cover any imperfections. Place some concealer under the eye if you are concerned about having dark under eyes.

Blush

Adding blush to the cheeks can give one a beautiful and healthy glow. In addition, placing your blush in different locations can give different effects. For example, placing blush on the high points of your cheek gives you a more contoured and defined look, while placing blush on and near your nose will give you an "almost sunburned" look.
