You don't want to find just any job. You want to explore careers in demand so that you pick a field that has greater potential for job security and high pay. Well, guess what? That's more than possible. After all, many of the in-demand jobs in Canada for the next five years offer great earning opportunities since employers need to attract and retain quality workers due to anticipated labour shortages. And with growing retirement rates expected among the baby boomer generation, among people born between the years of about 1946 and 1965, now is an excellent time for you to set out on a new career path.

Baby boomers make up Canada's largest demographic group, and they are starting to retire. In fact, in 2015, the baby boomer generation made up 27 percent of the population. At that point, only 18 percent of baby boomers had reached the age of 65.1. That means the retirement surge has barely started. As a result, many fantastic job opportunities could become available for younger Canadians like you who have all or most of their careers still ahead of them.

- 14. Quality workers have become more important due to anticipated labour shortages.
- 15. Those of the baby boomer generation were born between 1946 and 1965.
- 16. The baby boomer generation made up 18 percent of Canadian population in 2015.
- 17. What is the passage mainly about?
  - A. How to find a good job
  - B. It's time to explore careers in demand
  - C. Baby boomers in Canada's population
  - D. Great chance of getting good jobs in the future
- 18. Why are there many fantastic job opportunities for younger Canadians?
  - A. Many people of the baby boomer generation will retire.
  - B. Careers in demand will develop fast in Canada.
  - C. Canadian employees have good knowledge and skills.
  - D. They are the largest demographic group in Canada.

Over the last century, eating habits in Britain have changed dramatically. Our diets have been (19) _____ by all kinds of factors: by the technologies in our kitchens, by the modes of transport supplying our shops, by the media and the government and by trade and migration. The eating habits of our parents, grandparents and great-grandparents would be completely unrecognisable to (20) _____ of us today. Our experiences of shopping and cooking have been transformed as our attitudes towards health, table manners, 'foreign' foods, waste, and choice.

The British have long been notorious for having 'boring' food and conservative (21) _____. For many British families up until the last few decades, household eating patterns varied little from week to week. A Sunday roast would be (22) _____ by a few days of recycled leftovers - cold meat would be crafted into shepherd's pie or rissoles. Fish was (23) _____ served on Friday, at the point that the leftover meat had run out. Today, many of us enjoy a greater range of foods than ever before. For many of our grandparents, the (24) _____ that by 2007, raw Japanese fish would be sold in British supermarkets and widely enjoyed by people around the country would have been laughable.
