Jacques Cousteau

Jacques Cousteau was an explorer, filmmaker, scientist, photographer, and author of a series of popular books. As an ocean researcher, he led hundreds of marine expeditions with his team to study life under the sea. These expeditions made him one of the most famous explorers of modern times.

Cousteau's love for the sea started when he first learnt to swim at the age of 4. When he was a teenager, he also became interested in photography. In 1933, when Cousteau was 23, he had a serious car accident that almost killed him. To recover sooner, he went swimming in the Mediterranean Sea. One of his friends bought him a pair of swimming goggles so that he could see the sea floor while swimming. The beauty of the sea life excited him and he decided to make diving an important part of his life.

In 1942, with the help of a friend, Cousteau made his first underwater film, 18 Metres Deep, without using any breathing equipment. It was a 15-minute black and white documentary, for which he won an award. In 1943, Cousteau and his friend, Emile Gagnan, together invented the aqualung, whose modern name is scuba. The aqualung allowed divers to carry air with them which they could breathe when they went under water.

In 1948, Cousteau joined an expedition in the Mediterranean Sea to look for the sunken Roman ship, Mahdia. This expedition was very important because it was the beginning of underwater archaeology. In 1949, Cousteau gave up his old job and started working as a documentary filmmaker and became captain of the Calypso, a research ship. In 1953, he wrote a book called The Silent World, which was based on the diary he had kept during his scuba diving adventures and the results of his underwater explorations. The book met with a lot of success and was later made into a colour film, which made diving popular.

What made Cousteau even more famous, however, was the television series The Undersea World of Jacques Cousteau. The series, which attracted viewers from all over the world, ran for nine seasons, from 1968 to 1975. The show focused on the amazing variety of sea life which is found throughout the seas and oceans of the world. Through his television shows, Cousteau tried to teach people about the importance of protecting life in the sea.

Two Haunted Castles

Chillingham Castle

Chillingham Castle was built in the late 12th century and it was originally a monastery. From the 15th century until the 20th century, it was the home of the Earl Grey family. For centuries, people have believed that there are ghosts in the castle. The most famous ghost of the castle is the 'blue boy' who can be seen only in the Pink Room of the castle. However, Sir Humphry Wakefield, an expert in antiques and architecture, did not care about all the ghost stories and he bought the castle in 1982 even though it was in a bad condition. Sir Humphrey spent more than ten years repairing it in order to make it look like it originally was. Today, people still retell the stories about ghosts in the castle and this is one reason why Chillingham Castle is a major tourist attraction.

The castle is near the border between England and Scotland and just twenty minutes drive from Britain's east coast. The castle is a wonderful place for a day trip. Guests can join a guided tour of the castle, explore the local woods for wildlife or go fishing in the nearby lakes. Tantallon Castle

Tantallon Castle was the last great castle which was built in Scotland. It was built in the 14th century on the Scottish coast east of North Berwick, with a view of the sea and Bass Rock, a small island which looks like a white iceberg floating in the sea. The castle suffered a lot of damage from attacks until the 17th century, when its owners finally decided to leave it and nobody lived there ever again.

Although not much remains of the castle, it is still a popular tourist attraction. Visitors leave their cars at the car park and walk to the visitor centre, where they can buy their entrance tickets. As they get near the castle, the 15-metre tall Curtain Wall can have such an effect on visitors that they may feel that there is nothing else to see. However, once they pass through the castle gate, they discover there is a lot to explore. They can climb the stairs in the central tower and get excellent views of what is around it. They can also enter the castle's frightening prison and the remains of the Great Hall where once, long ago, musicians entertained the many dinner guests who were invited to the castle.

What draws many tourists to the castle nowadays is that they believe there are ghosts in it. A picture taken in 2008 shows a man wearing old-fashioned clothes looking out of a window. Was this the ghost of the castle?
