Pin The Wart On The Witch Musical Monsters

Spooky Spoons, Mummy Bandages

This is great fun for younger children as they'll be familiar with the non-Halloween version of Musical Statues - and this twist gives them an excuse to be as loud and scary as they can. When the music starts (make a Halloween playlist together beforehand), get everyone to walk, crawl, slither or pounce around the room doing their best monster, zombie or beast impression with screams and wailing galore. When the music stops, so must the players...and the first to move is out. Last monster standing (very, very still) is the winner.

You'll need to split into equal teams or partners for this one. For each round, one member of the team will become the mummy and needs to stand still with their arms out in front of them. The rules are scarily simple - start a countdown, and on '1', the teams get a minute to wrap their mummy's entire body with white loo roll. The winner is the best-looking mummy after time runs out.

You'll need a big sheet of paper or card, crayons (or felt tip pens), a blindfold (scarves are good) and some 'wart' stickers (draw your own pimples on some sticky labels and cut to size). Get the kids to draw a big picture of a scary witch, and stick it on a wall. Everyone takes turns to be blindfolded, spun around gently and led to the picture. Then hand them a warty sticker and let them guess where it should go. Closest to the tip of the nose wins.

This one is probably better for older kids and grown-ups. See who can move the most bat droppings (raisins, of course) from one bowl to another using only a spoon in their mouth. Use chocolate chips if you prefer, and use straws to suck them up as you move them instead of spoons.
