Pet behaviourist

	it can be difficult to get to the bottom of what causes this behaviour – which is where a pet behaviourist comes in. Pet behaviourists spend time with a pet, assessing their unusual behaviour (perhaps at home or out on a walk), to help the owners work on rectifying it. In doing so, they often strengthen the bond between pet and owner – making both much happier. While some people prefer to study a degree in animal behaviour, others prefer to apply for a job working closely with animals (for example, in a dog kennel or animal rescue centre) and train on the job. You could also start by gaining voluntary experience with an animal charity – If you love animals, then becoming a pet behaviourist is a fantastic way to spend more time with the world's furry friends which will give you a chance to talk to people in the industry and find out more about whether it's the right career for you! whilst getting to know them from the inside out. For many people, having a lovable companion is fun and problem-free, but it can become a worry if they start to exhibit strange behaviour. And because animals can't speak to us and tell us what's going on,
