IV Read and answer

Rosa Parks was a Black woman who played an important part in making positive changes for Black Early Life people in American society.

Segregation in America When Rosa Parks was growing up, the laws in many American states meant that Black people were not allowed to use the same public places as White people, such as schools, transport, toilets and restaurants. This was called 'segregation'. They also made it difficult for Black people to vote. Many White people did not respect Black people and treated them unfairly.

On 1st December 1955, Rosa Parks was on the bus on her way home from work. She was sitting in the area for Black people. However, the rule was that if the White area was full, a Black person must give up their seat for a White person. On this day, the White area was full so Rosa was told to move but she refused. The driver threatened to call the police but Rosa still didn't move. The police eventually came and arrested her and she had to pay a fine.

What Rosa did on that day started a big movement. 40,000 Black people in the area and some White people refused to use the buses until they were treated fairly. This was called the Montgomery bus boycott. The boycott went on for 381 days before the government finally lifted the segregation on buses.
