

A careful student

A young boy named Sam arrived at school one morning for a final test. He knew _____ test was only true-false questions, but he was still nervous. Slowly, he entered his classroom, _____ a seat and watched his classmates, _____ looked nervous, too. Many of them were still studying.

Then, at exactly 8 o'clock, the teacher entered the room and _____ the students to clear their desks. She then walked around the room and gave the students a test. 'You have one hour to finish,' she said.

Sam _____ at the test for five minutes without writing _____ answers. Then, he took a coin from his pocket and threw it into the air. He caught it, opened his hand, and saw that the coin showed heads¹. So, he wrote 'true' for the answer to the first question. He repeated _____ for every question on the test: heads for true, tails² for false.

After only 30 minutes, Sam finished his exam, _____ the rest of the class continued working. He sat back in his desk, happy _____ done and went to sleep for the next 20 minutes.

_____, just before the school bell rang, Sam woke up and quickly began throwing the coin into the air. He threw it again and again, _____ time checking what it showed and writing _____ fast as possible.

The teacher watched Sam _____. She slowly walked over to his desk and asked what he _____. 'Well, I finished the exam _____ half an hour,' Sam said. 'But then, just before the end of class, I remembered that I should check my answers.'

What is the best title for this article?

Last week in Maransk, Russia, a kindergarten teacher was in the garden with some children when policemen arrived and asked her to count them. When she did, she found that two boys were missing. The teacher was in shock because she hadn't noticed the boys weren't there. She thought the policemen came to take her to the police station. But instead, they opened their car door and the two boys got out. The policemen informed the teacher that a driver had seen the boys all alone in front of a car shop. As it seemed strange, the driver took them to the police station. There, the boys told the policemen about a tunnel they had been preparing for a week and how they had escaped from the kindergarten through it. Then they walked to the place where the driver later saw them. The boys said that all they wanted to do there was to buy a car. Although the boys' parents did not make any official complaint, the teacher lost her job anyway.

