On October 23, I run the Boston Marathon with a partner, Marcia Davis. We been training together for last year in the Washington Marathon. The start of the race was dramatic. Up to that point, we had joking and laughing, but we are very serious when we lined up. I was so nervous that I couldn't breathe. Marcia and I has practiced on those same streets for a couple of weeks. Thus, at the beginning we do well. By the time we got to Heartbreak Hill, we be running for almost four hours, and I really believed we could finish. Then, halfway up the hill, Marcia stopped. Since she just couldn't run anymore. We had been looking forward to this race for so long that I doesn't want to go on alone, but Marcia wants me to finish. When I got to the finish line, I saw Marcia. She waited for me for three hours. First, we cried yet, then we started talking about next year's marathon.
