WHEELS	HANDLEBAR

STORY

It was a beautiful friday morning. The sky was a brilliant blue and the leaves rustled in the gentle wind. The fresh morning air was crisp and cool. My father is teaching me how to cycle today. I was so excited, I was like a dog with two tails.

I tentatively placed my legs on the pedal as my father held firmly to the handlebars of the bicycle. The bicycle began to wobble. I was scared at first. My dad assured me I will be fine. Slowly, I began to pedal down the pavement. I moved faster and faster. Soon, I was sailing down the pavement.

“Hold on to your brakes!” my father shouted. I realized I didn’t know where the brakes were!

“Oh no!” I muttered. Within seconds, I fell down with a thud. “You need to listen to all instructions before you ride your bike!” My father chided me.

This time, I learnt my lesson and patiently listened to all the instructions my father gave me. Soon, I was sailing down every hill in the park without a hitch. I made an accomplishment that day. I learnt how to cycle. My father beamed from ear to ear and I felt like I was in seventh heaven
