The Eiffel Tower in Paris, France is one of the best-known landmarks in the world. The Tower was designed and constructed by the French engineer Gustave Eiffel, who the tower was named after, in 1889. The design of the Eiffel Tower was selected from a contest organized by the French government. At that time, the government was looking for a spectacular design for their world's fair, which was held to celebrate the 100-year anniversary of the French Revolution. Not many people supported their decision to choose the Eiffel design because nothing of that kind had ever been built before. The tower was intended to stand for only 20 years but it could stay longer. This is because other changes were made to the tower that made it more useful. Those include a weather station in 1890 and a telegraph station in 1903. These days, the Eiffel Tower attracts millions of tourists yearly.
