The dark side of the web

1 The Internet has changed the world for the better, but it has also brought many problems with it.The first one was spam – unwanted advertisements. And then there were viruses that could steal information from a user's computer. There was also the problem of making sure that children didn't go on adult websites. And now there are Internet trolls – people who write unkind comments on websites for fun.

2 Cyber bullying, where children use social websites to say bad things to other children, is a fast-growing problem. In England, for every three children that use the Internet, one child says they have been cyber bullied. And in 2012, five school children killed themselves because of online bullying. The youngest child was only thirteen years old.

3 A typical case is Tina, who posted a picture of herself on Facebook. She didn't believe that cyber bullying could be so bad. At first, she got some bad comments from people she didn't know. She still thought the photo was okay and didn't care. But then her good friends started to write bad comments about the photo. That's what really hurt her. Then people set up a Facebook page saying they hated her. She didn't read it and asked Facebook to block the new Facebook page.

4 English schools are now teaching Internet safety to pupils so they can enjoy the good side of the web. And websites are also doing more to control what people can do when using their sites. Also the British government is blocking some foreign websites from the Internet, and the media are informing parents how to make their computers safer for children to use.

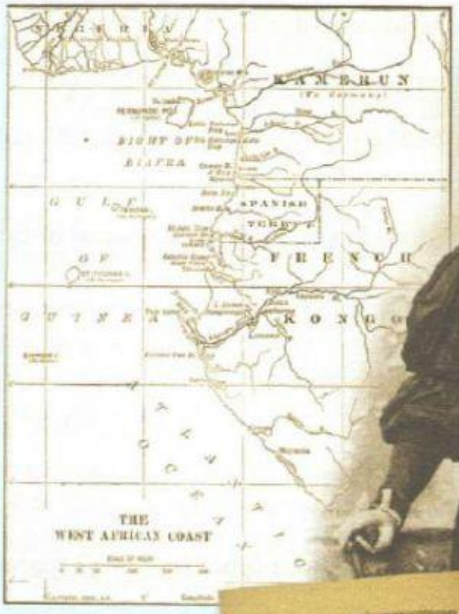
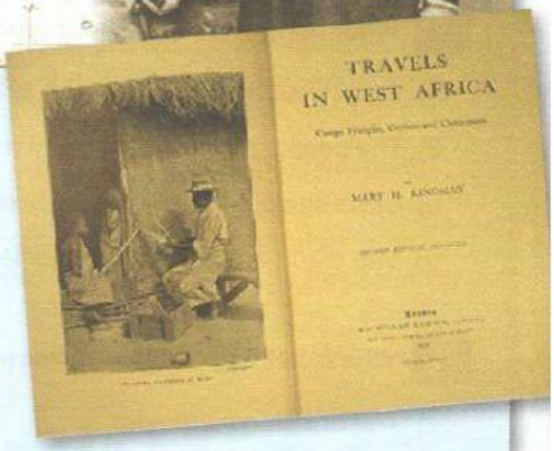
Scary Mary!

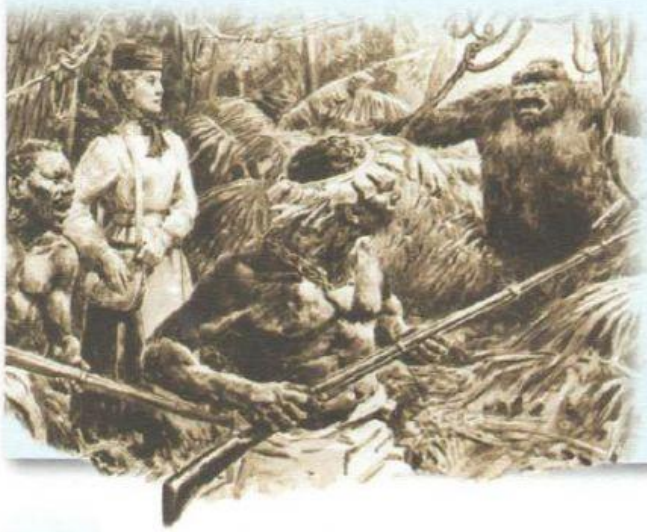




1 When Mary Kingsley was a child she studied hard. Her teachers expected her to be a scientist, like her father. But Mary enjoyed reading about Dr. Livingstone and knew that she wanted to do the same. Her parents weren't happy because Dr. Livingstone was an explorer who travelled around Africa and never came back. They didn't want their daughter to do the same as Dr. Livingstone. They wanted her to get married and have children.

2 Mary had to wait until 1892, when she was thirty years old to be like the person in the books she read. Unfortunately her parents died, but they left her a lot of money. She stopped working as a nurse and used her parents' money to go travelling around Africa.

3 In Africa, Mary travelled alone to many dangerous places. She was interested in cannibal tribes, and she met the Fang people, who took her to their land, where no European had been before. She also travelled up the Ogooué river in a canoe. On this journey, she was almost killed by crocodiles but escaped. Her happiest memory was climbing Mount Cameroon, 13,000 ft high.



4 Mary wrote a book, Travels in West Africa, which was very popular. At that time, people in England thought Africa was a terrible place where people ate each other and were like animals. Her book showed African people as caring and helpful. Mary also wrote that the Church of England should stop trying to change Africans' religion into Christianity. Later in life, she returned to Africa to help sick soldiers but became sick herself and died.

Dear Luxy,

1 I'm really enjoying working for David Racula. He's different than I'd thought. I expected a tall, dark man, but he's quite short and blonde. He said he looks like his mother, but she was really thin and David is fat. Poor woman. She died of a sore throat.

2 David's house is so big; we hardly meet. He always eats his breakfast before I'm up, and then he likes to have a sleep afterwards. In the afternoon, he works down in the cellar. I eat dinner alone and wait for David to finish his work, at ten in the evening. Then he likes me to read him a book. I started Dracula, but he had already read it.

3 David doesn't have any mirrors. I feel I look like a clown when I put my make-up on in the morning. David doesn't eat much. He hates eating garlic soup, and no one is allowed to say the word "steak". Maybe David is a vegetarian?

4 I'm so looking forward to your visit, Lucy. David asked me lots of questions about you. He was so pleased when I told him that you sleep with the window open and you have a nice red face. But when I said you were a dentist, he wasn't happy. Then he asked me if you wore glasses. I told him you always take your glasses off before bed. He was so happy! Anyway, I need to go. I have so much work it's killing me!

Love,

Mina

The Free Film Festival

Welcome to the Free Film Festival

The only film festival where you don't need to pay to watch the films. All you need to do is download a ticket and come to enjoy the movies. This year, we're lucky to have the film director Bernard le Bernard. He will talk about his new film The Life of Bernard – a black-and-white French comedy (240 minutes).

You can watch films from the 17th May to the 19th May. The festival starts at 7 o'clock on Friday night, and continues for the whole weekend. On Saturday and Sunday, the films start at 3 p.m. and finish at 11 p.m. This year the festival will take place on Brighton beach, between the Imperial Hotel and the West Pier. The festival is outdoors, so please bring an umbrella!

There will be three screens showing different types of films:

THE MAIN SCREEN
English-language films.

THE SMALL SCREEN
family films and animations

THE LEFT-OF-THE-PIER SCREEN
foreign films with English subtitles

As well as films, there will also be music and bands – The Wild Bees, The Painted Faces, Us 5 and DJ Sleepy. The music starts at the main screen after the films finish.
