A tasty invention!

You may eat chocolate chip cookies every day, but you probably don't know anything about the woman who invented them! Here's the true story of Ruth Wakefield ...

During the Second World War, families sent chocolate chip cookies to their sons, brothers, and fathers who were soldiers a long way from home. They shared the cookies with other soldiers, and so lots of people tried them and loved them. Ruth started to get hundreds of letters from people who liked her cookies and who wanted more.

Ruth Wakefield was born in Massachusetts on June 17, 1903. She probably loved food from a young age because it was very important to her when she was older.

After she finished school, in 1924, she became a dietitian – someone who teaches people about food and how to have a healthy diet. In 1930, she bought a hotel called the Toll House Inn with her husband, Kenneth Donald Wakefield. It was very popular, and visitors came from all over the world. One of the most famous visitors was John F. Kennedy, before he became the president of the U.S. in 1961!

Ruth became famous for her excellent fish dinners and desserts, and in 1930, she wrote a very successful recipe book. Then, Ruth invented the chocolate chip cookie. It became really popular. Some people think that it was an accident and that Ruth wanted the chocolate to melt into the cookie. But the chocolate stayed solid, and that was the start of the cookie we all know and love today! The first recipe for how to make this famous cookie appeared in Ruth's cookbook in 1938.
