

A Noise From Below

I climb to the top of the giant rock, gulping for breath. I feel myself reaching for my water bottle, and stop. If I want to survive, I have to save water.

At least I still have my first-aid kit in my bag. I have some matches, too. Later, when it gets dark, I can light a fire. Maybe I can build a kind of shelter, too.

But right now, I need to try to get help. I put down the long branch I have carried for miles. Then I take off my jacket and tie it to the end like a flag. I push the branch up high so the jacket flutters in the wind.

The flag flies for what seems like hours. Then I hear it. A noise from far below. Is that a shout? It is! My flag has worked!
