Many cities in the world have problems with cigarette butts(1) streets, and now, a company in Sweden came up (2) an interesting idea to solve these problems. The company made a special box where wild crows put the cigarette butts. When they do it, they get a little food. An official said that it was easier to teach crows to pick (3) cigarette butts than to teach people not to throw them (4) the ground. A city near the capital city of Stockholm, Sweden, spends around 2.2 million dollars (5) cleaning the streets every year. The company says that crows could reduce the number (6) 75%.
