What should we do about joyriding?

DanW I've seen a lot of news reports lately about car crashes in our community, and many of them seem to involve stolen cars. I'm really angry and frustrated about this. Everyone knows that joyriders don't usually get sent to prison. So that's my solution: Put them in jail!

GenXr Well, I think penalties for joyriding should be increased, but not for the joyriders themselves. Most of the time, these are kids who are joyriding in their parents' cars. I mean, they've taken their parents' cars without permission, but the parents are at least partly to blame. So I think the parents should be fined.

Gailmd One thing's for sure – we don't need more laws. After all, joyriding itself isn't the problem – it's the fact that many joyriders drive recklessly, have accidents, and sometimes hurt or kill other people. We already have laws against all that. They just need to be better enforced.

BobbyinNY We should consider the background that most joyriders come from. Most of them are young people from poor backgrounds. They're joyriding because they don't have anything better to do. We need to provide more money for youth programs so they can get involved in sports and things like that.

1. Joyriders aren't the only people who should be held responsible. _____
2. Unfortunately, there are no laws now against joyriding. _____
3. People who joyride don't have enough support in their communities. _____
4. Joyriders don't drive recklessly, so joyriding isn't really a problem. _____
5. Not enough joyriders are sent to prison. _____
6. Taking a car for a joyride is as bad as breaking into someone's house. _____
7. There are already enough laws to deal with this problem. _____
