Determiners are words such as this, my, some, a few and many, which are used before nouns. They are a special kind of adjective.

This

determiner

book belongs to Sam.

The Articles

The articles belong to the class of words called determiners. The words a, an and the are the articles

GRAMMAR HELP

- ♦ The e in the has a short sound before words beginning with a consonant, like the words below:

the carpet	the dentist
the television	the road
the sitting room	the sofa
- ♦ When you use the before a word beginning with a vowel, it has a different sound. You say it with a long e, like the sound in me or bee or tea:

the umbrella	the apple
the orang-utan	the igloo
the exit	the ugly duckling
- ♦ The word university starts with a sound like the consonant y, so the e in the is short before university:

Mum teaches at the university.
- ♦ The word one starts with a w sound, so the e in the is short before one:

Is this the one you wanted?

The word the is called the definite article. You use the before a noun when you are talking about something or someone definite, and people know which thing or person you mean.

The telephone is ringing.
Where is the cat?
I think she's under the bed.
I have to go to the dentist today.
Helen is laying the table.

I'm going to read it slowly, type in the answers as I read or read by yourself.
