Would you prefer to travel in a group or alone around Europe?

Ted Exstein,

Both travelling in groups and alone have the upsides and their downsides - and really it all depends on the people involved. A couple of weeks ago I traveled to Prague for the weekend with a group.

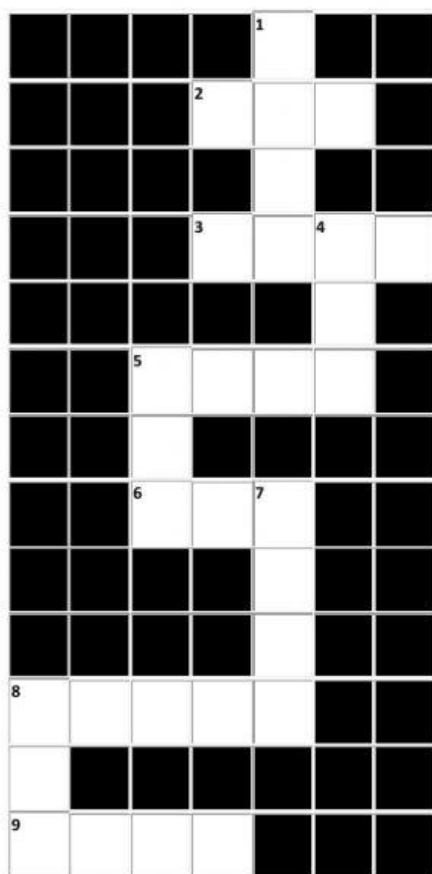

Some advantages were: I didn't have to arrange transportation, hotel, where to eat, what to see, how to get around the city - I just had to cooperate, be at the right place at the right time and listen politely. Also, there was some cost savings - because the group traveled by bus we got a group rate on the transportation - which was probably cheaper than if I had booked on my own.

Disadvantages: There was some free time, but not a lot. We visited Prague Castle and didn't go inside or inside many buildings. On group trips you are stuck with the group, and if you don't get along with everyone it can be a bit tiresome. Also, the chosen restaurants may not serve anything that you will enjoy.

Traveling alone has its pros and cons, for example, on the plus side: Your schedule is your own: Go where you want to go, see what you want to see, take as much time or as little as works for you.

On the downside: You have to do all the planning: Transportation to and from destinations as well as around the cities. This can get kind of costly; Additionally, if you are somewhat introverted, you might get a bit lonely because you won't have anyone to talk to. Lastly, on one will give you insight into the local art, architecture, history or anything else .
