People think children should play sports. Sports are fun, and children stay healthy while playing with others. However, playing sports can have negative effects on children. It may produce feelings of poor self-esteem or aggressive behavior in some children. According to research on kids and sports, 40 million kids play sports in the US. Of these, 18 million say they have been yelled at or called names while playing sports. This leaves many children with a bad impression of sports. They think sports are just too aggressive.

Many researchers believe adults, especially parents and coaches, are the main cause of too much aggression in children's sports. They believe children copy aggressive adult behavior. This behavior is then further reinforced through both positive and negative feedback. Parents and coaches are powerful teachers because children usually look up to them. Often these adults behave aggressively themselves, sending children the message that winning is everything. At children's sporting events, parents may yell insults at other players or cheer when their child behaves aggressively. As well, children may be taught that hurting other players is acceptable, or they may be pushed to continue playing even when they are injured. In addition, the media makes violence seem exciting. Children watch adult sports games and see violent behavior replayed over and over on television.

As a society, we really need to face up to problem and do something about it. Parents and coaches should act as better examples for children. They also need to teach children better values. They should teach children to enjoy themselves whether they win or not. It is not necessary to knock yourself out to enjoy sports. Winning is not everything. In addition, children should not be allowed to continue to play when they are injured. Sending a child with an injury into a game gives the child the message that health is not as important as winning. If we make some basic changes, children might learn to enjoy sports again.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions from 35 to 42.

Watching television recently, I came across a very interesting program. On the show, a journalist was interviewing people from two distinct age groups. The first group was all people in their 40s and 50s, chosen randomly on a street in the U.S. The second group was elementary school children from the U.S., mainly between the ages of eight and twelve.

The interview was simple. The journalist explained the situation: A father and his young son were driving along the highway, when they were in a serious accident. They were both rushed, unconscious, to a nearby hospital, in critical condition. The child was immediately prepared for emergency surgery. However, the surgeon took one look at the child and said, “I cannot operate on this boy. He is my son.” Then the journalist asked the interviewees, “If the man in the car is the boy’s father, who is the surgeon?”

While the question seems like an easy one, many of the people in the older group had a very difficult time answering it. In fact, only a handful of the people interviewed were able to come up with the correct answer. “Maybe the man in the car was the boy’s step-father,” some said. Others even suggested that the question was a trick, and the term ‘father’ actually meant that the man in the car was a priest. And many just admitted that they simply had no idea who the surgeon could be.

In contrast to the older group, nearly all of the children were able to produce the correct answer with almost no hesitation at all. “The surgeon is the boy’s mother!” many of them shouted.

What the experiment clearly illustrates is the vast difference in the way different generations have come see the roles of males and females in society. From this simple survey, it is easy to draw the conclusion that the older people were simply unable to imagine that the surgeon might be a woman. Most of these people grew up in an era when a woman’s main role was as a mother and caregiver. The idea that there might be female surgeons, soldiers, and CEOs might not have gained currency with them, even to this day.

The youngsters, on the other hand, did not hold such obsolete notions of a woman’s role in society. Many, growing up with mothers who are doctors, lawyers, and even soldiers, saw straight through the ‘tricky’ question.

This program pointed out to me just how much our society is changing. At 45 years old, I, myself had a hard time answering the question. How did you answer the question?
