Question the Obvious

Today, I'm going to tell you an important fact:

Earth is not the center of the universe.

What are you talking about, Copernicus?

Earth is the center, and the sun goes around it!

No, we were wrong. Earth goes around the sun.

No way! Get out of here!

< P.84 >

"Today, I'm going to talk about new discoveries."

Until the 16th century, the center of the universe was Earth.

This was obvious, and everyone believed it.

But Copernicus asked, "Is it really true?"

His question started a big change.

Today, Earth isn't the center of the universe anymore.

This story teaches us an important lesson.

We should always question obvious things.

Then we can make discoveries.

There are other examples in history.

In the past, humans couldn't travel through the air.

But some people began to wonder, "Can we travel through the air?"

The Wright brothers also asked this question,

and they finally made an airplane.

The same went for the submarine.

Traveling under the water looked impossible, but people finally found a way.

< P.85 >

It's still going on today.

Where does meat come from? Of course, it comes from animals.

But some scientists wanted to get meat in a different way.

"How about plants?" they wondered.

They used beans and peas, and they made new, healthy "meat."

Surprisingly, it doesn't taste like beans or peas.

It tastes exactly like real meat.

Do you want to find out new things?

Then look around and question obvious things, just like history's great inventors!
